How exciting it is to find ourselves in chapter 25, and seeing Paul’s defense before the governor of Judea, whose name was Festus. We began this study last Lord’s Day, and we’re going to complete it today - that is, the study of chapter 25, verses 1 to 12. Those verses record for us Paul’s trial before Festus. You know, the Word of God is such a treasure. It’s hard for me to understand why there would be any such thing as a Christian who didn’t study the Bible, when you realize what’s here.

The riches, the treasures that are here, to be discovered, and to be mined. And I feel like David, who said, “Oh, how I love Thy law.” Well, as we look at the book of Acts, as we have found, many of the deepest treasures in the book of Acts are just that: they’re deep, they’re down under the surface, and we’ve got to kind of mine them out. In a book like this that is historical narrative, most of the doctrine and the spiritual principles are under the surface; that is, they are implied or illustrated.

And an example of that is the passage in which we’re dealing today, where there is no particular statement regarding any doctrine, and yet there are at least ten principles that just leap out of this page. Ten tremendous truths that are deep, they’re buried, and you’ve got to uproot them, and so what we want to do is kind of pull the food up that’s under the ground, and feast on it a little bit this morning, and see what it is that God will nourish us with. Now, we mentioned to you last time that as we looked at these verses, we found at least ten principles here.

And there are probably more, and I’m not sure we can handle ten, ’cause that’s a lot. But there are ten principles that just kind of come out of the passage without being stated; they are implied or they are illustrated. And they are these, and I only remind you of them. We see in this passage the hatred of religious people toward Christ and Christians. We see also the binding power of sin illustrated. Then we see evidence of the sovereign providence of God; then we find, also, the pattern of the world’s persecution - that is, the way in which the world persecutes.

We see also the innocence and the blamelessness of the life of Paul, and the effect that such a blameless life had. We see the exoneration of Christianity in terms of being a political issue or a criminal activity. We see the courage of a committed Christian. We see as well how the Christian is to behave toward his government, and we see also the Christian’s attitude toward persecution. Finally, we see what the impact is of one totally dedicated life. Now, these are tremendous principles. I hasten to say this: none of them are new.

All of them we have taught you before, and it’s as if the Holy Spirit just puts this narrative here as a reminder. That like Peter said, “I will not cease to put you in remembrance of these things,” so the Holy Spirit puts us in remembrance of all these principles, which we have already seen in the book of Acts. They seem to be kind of summed up in these 12 verses, as under the surface they begin to appear as you pull up the roots. Now, looking at the passage, I want to divide the 12 verses into 4 parts, and as we go through the 4 parts, we’ll just see these 10 principles.
The first part, as we told you last time, was the assassination plot in verses 1 to 5, and if you'd like, you may follow along that outline you have, and take some notes. The assassination plotted: the apostle Paul, as you know, has been accused of the Jews of really three things: sedition - that is, crimes against Rome, being an insurrectionist; sectarianism - that is, being a heretic; and sacrilege - blasphemying God through the desecration of the temple. These accusations are all false.

They are without evidence, without support, and yet, they are made against him. As a result of this, Paul finally found himself before Felix, the governor, to be tried. Felix knew he was innocent, but he didn't want to upset the Jews, who wanted him dead, so Felix kept him in prison for two years. At the end of two years, Felix was taken from his assignment in disgrace and hauled back to Rome, and a new man was put in his place by the name of Festus. And as chapter 25 opens, Festus arrives in Caesarea to take over his responsibility; and I'll read to you verses 1 to 5.

Follow as I read. "Now when Festus was come into the province" - that is, the province of Judea - "after three days he ascended from Caesarea to Jerusalem." Caesarea, of course, was the head of the Roman government there in Judea, and he did a little bit of business there for three days, and then headed for Jerusalem, because he knew that it was important for him to establish relationships with the people over whom he would rule. And he knew that relationships had been extremely shaky with Felix, and it was important for him to bind together some sort of working relationship.

He came to Jerusalem, then, and immediately, "The high priest" – verse 2 – "and the chief ones of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him, and desired a favor against him, that he would send him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him." The first thing they bring up when Festus arrives in Jerusalem is this guy who's been a prisoner for two years, who never really committed any crime, but who they hate with a deep, deep hatred, and they want him dead. So, they say to Festus, who is totally naïve and uninformed, "Could you kindly bring this prisoner to Jerusalem? We'd like to have a little bit of dealings with this particular case, so bring him here." Really, they wanted to ambush Paul on the way and kill him; Festus didn't know that. "But Festus answered" - in verse 4 – "that Paul should be kept at Caesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly for there." "No," he said, "I'm not going to bring him here. I'm going to Caesarea myself."

Verse 5: "Let them therefore, who among you are able" - or, that is, who are able men, who are influential men - "go down with me, and accuse the man, if there is any wickedness in him." So, Festus says, "I'm not going to bring him to Jerusalem. If you have anything to bring against the man, let's do it in Caesarea." Now, as we saw last time, and went through those verses in detail, there are some tremendous spiritual principles that are implied and applied in this particular illustration.

The first thing we see here is the hatred of religious people toward Jesus Christ. The folks who were really antagonistic toward Paul were Christian – were not Christians, I should say, but were Jews; they were religious people. The persecution that comes against true religion most often comes from false religion. It is when false religion rears its head that it begins to abuse the truth. These folks were the religious leaders of their land, of their day.

Satan, of course, who disguises himself as an angel of light, and propagates all the systems of false religion, of course, sets them in antagonism toward true religion. The most obvious enemy of Christ is false religion. Now, all throughout the book of Acts, it is the Jews, the religionists, who persecute Christ - and when I say Christ, that means both Jesus Christ when He was alive, and those who teach what He taught and believe in Him as their Messiah. But they continued the persecution.

I think it’s an interesting footnote, and I’ll expand it in a minute, that the only times the Roman persecution ever broke out was when it was a religious issue. Somebody would say, “Well, yeah, you say it’s always the religionists, but what about the Romans, when they persecuted?” Well, it was a religious issue with them, too, and we’ll see that in just a minute. Religion is always the persecutor, because, you see, Satan, in opposition to true religion, sets up false religion, brings all the unbelievers into the systems of false religion, and they are in opposition to the truth.

That’s why any such thing as an ecumenical movement is absolutely ridiculous. When I was coming here this morning about 7:00, I was listening to the religious news on the radio station where they give this stuff on Sunday mornings. And they were saying that there recently was a great meeting in - some city, I forget which. But it was a meeting of the Muslims, the Christians, and the Jews. And the Muslims were represented by some Arab, and the Christians were represented by some Coptic priest or bishop from the Coptic church, and Jewish rabbis.

And they were trying to find out how they could all get together. The only way they could ever get together is if the Christianity that is represented there is run by Satan, because obviously, he is running the Judaism and Muslimism, because it’s anti-Christ. It is ludicrous to imagine that Christians and Jews and Muslims, or Christians and anybody else in any other religion, can get together. It’s impossible, because all other systems of religion are against Christ. And when that effort is made, the only thing that ever results is the loss of true Christianity.

True Christianity is a rebuke to all other religions in the world. We cannot accommodate them. Jesus said, “He that is not with me is against me.” And if Christianity is Jesus Christ, and anything other than Christianity is in opposition to Him, there can be no communion there. And throughout history, it has been the religionists who have persecuted the truth. This is, I think, stated clearly in 2 Peter, chapter 2. Peter says in verse 1, “There were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you.”

You go back to the history of Israel, and you’ll find out that the biggest problem that Israel ever had historically was the problem that it had with the pagan religions, wasn’t it? And drifting into idolatry, and drifting into Baal worship, and being hassled by all the gods of the pagans - that was always the problem. And it’s no different now, he says. “There shall be false teachers among you, secretly bringing in destructive heresies, denying the Lord that bought them, and bringing on themselves swift destruction.”

Now watch. “Many shall follow their pernicious” – or evil – “ways; and because of that, the way of truth will be evil spoken of.” False teachers will always speak evil of the truth. The only way that Christianity can ever get together with all kinds of false religions is when they’re willing to take the evil that is set against the truth and abandon the truth. We always stand isolated; we have to. That is our identity, because all the systems of religion in the world are against Christ. Now, you say, “Well, they don’t seem to be.”

That’s the idea. They secretly bring in destructive heresies. It’s not always obvious; it’s subtle, very often. Some religions are violently anti-Christ, some religions are subtly anti-Christ by being maybe pro-Jesus’ ethic, and nothing more; certainly not pro-Jesus as God in human flesh, Savior of the world. So, the hatred, historically, that has come against the truth, has come from religious systems, and I think it’s important for you to realize that. There is no way that you are ever going to accommodate people in false religious systems; you must confront them.

Let me give you a second principle that we saw here, and that is the binding power of sin. Here are these religious leaders in Israel. It’s been two years since they’ve had to deal with Paul; two years, he’s been in jail. You would think that in two years, they would pretty well have forgotten about the guy. But when two years is up, and Festus, the new governor, arrives, the first thing they say to this guy, in verse 2, is all about Paul. “We’ve got to have him dead,” they say. “Let’s go to Festus and work out a little plot, and we’ll ambush him.”

They are hung on Paul two years, and they haven’t even seen him. Now, that tells me a little about hate; does it tell you something about hate? It really drives itself deep, and it stays there. That’s the way sin is; sin is a binding thing. I show you the words of Jesus to illustrate this principle, and it appears in a passage that is perhaps familiar to you, John chapter 8 and verse 30. Listen as I read it. Jesus was speaking, and it says, “As he spoke, many believed on him. Then said Jesus to the Jews who believed on him, ‘If you continue in My word, then are you My disciples indeed; And you shall know the truth and the truth shall make you’ — what? — ‘free.’”

Jesus says, “I’m glad you believe, but the proof of the true faith is if you continue. And if you continue in My word, you are truly saved, and the truth shall make you free.” Now, by saying that, He implied that they weren’t what? Free. They were slaves. Well, of course, they didn’t like that. They said, “We are Abraham’s seed.” And of course, they thought just because they were Jews, that meant they were absolutely free. They said, “We have never been in bondage to any man.”

Now, now - how about the Egyptians? How about the Babylonians? Have you forgotten the Medo-Persians, the Syrians, the Grecians, and the Romans? You’ve never been in bondage to any man? “Well, we’re talking spiritually.” Oh? Fine. “Jesus answered them, ‘Verily, verily, I say unto you, whosoever commits sin is the slave of sin.’” They were slaves. Notice what He says. “Whoever commits a sin is a” — what? — “slave to sin.” Sin is a slavery. Sin binds, and the word doulos means a bondslave. The only way you could cease being a bondslave was to die.

The only way out was death, and our Lord says that sin is bondage, sin is slavery. In Titus 3, sinners are called doulos, bondslaves to lust; in Romans 6:19, a bondslave to uncleanness. Sin is slavery; sin captures a man. A man is not a free man, he is a slave. The only release from the slavery is death, and isn’t it marvelous to realize that it was only as you were crucified with Jesus Christ, only, as Romans 6 says, that you died in Him, that were freed from death? You woke up in the resurrection, and became a doulos to a new master; not sin, but Jesus Himself.

You’re still a bondslave, but you’re a bondslave to Jesus Christ. And I’ll tell you something: being a bondslave to Christ is better than being free to sin. And so, you see the binding character of sin. How sad it is that these men would allow two years to go by, and still be totally destroyed on the inside by this hatred for Paul. Paul, who loved them, and was an innocent man. A third principle that we saw there in the passage, reviewing, was the providence of God. We saw that in spite of what seemed to be the normal course of events, God was ordering things.
When they said to Festus, “Hey Festus, why don’t you take Paul up to Jerusalem? We want to do some business regarding his case,” he said, “No.” Very strange. The normal thing would have been to say yes, right? He was trying to win the Jews; he was trying to influence them for his side. He was trying to conciliate them, make friends, establish a base of operation. But instead of saying yes, he says no, and there isn’t any reason to say no, other than the fact that God is in control. I get excited when I think about the fact that God is in control, don’t you?

Listen to Lamentations 3:37-38: “Who is there who speaks, and it comes to pass, unless the Lord has commanded it?” Isn’t that terrific? Listen to the next verse. “Is it not from the mouth of the Most High that both good and ill go forth?” Nothing happens for good or evil unless it is in the framework of God’s allowance. That’s clear in the Word of God. And Festus didn’t know it, but he was just moving along on the divine timetable, and his own attitudes fitted the consistency of the will of God. God controls the destiny of every man.

All right, the second point we see here: the assassination plot at first, then the accusation presented, verse 6: “And when he had tarried among them more than eight or ten days, he went down to Caesarea.” Now, here’s Festus going down to Caesarea, like he said he would. “The next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought. And when he was come, the Jews who came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul.” We’ll stop there.

All right, so eight or ten days later, Festus has made some contacts, established, perhaps, relationships with the high priests, the Sanhedrin, and whoever else he needed to. Now he’s hustled back down to Caesarea. He arrives in Caesarea the very next day. He brings Paul. The accusers have come from Jerusalem, ready to lay the case. Now, what do we find here? They lay down grievous charges, many of them, complaints. And here, we find, again, another principle. This is the fourth of the principles that we’re going to see, and it is this: the typical pattern of the world’s persecution.

Now watch. The world persecutes on two premises: they persecute falsely, and for Christ’s sake. Listen to Matthew 5, the words of Jesus: “Blessed are you, when men shall persecute you, and revile you, and accuse you falsely, for my sake.” There are the two ingredients in the typical pattern of the world’s persecution: they accuse you falsely, and for Christ’s sake. In other words, it isn’t you they hate, it’s Christ. It isn’t you they resent, it’s Christianity. Now, some Christians live such messed-up lives that it may be you they resent.

But the point of it is that if you really receive the true rebuking of the world as Paul received it, it won’t be because you fouled up so much you deserve it. It will be false, and it will be for Christ’s sake, because of the vibrancy of your testimony for Christ. Our lives should be so lived that the accusations are false. Our lives should be so lived that the only accusation people could make was that they couldn’t stand our Christianity. They should falsely accuse us.

And I’ll tell you something, people, when Christians’ lives are that way, when Christians’ lives are lives that can only be accused falsely, then the world is really going to take notice of us; believe it. Let me show you the third point, and now we’ll begin really where we wanted to begin today, in verse 7. After we’ve seen the assassination plotted and the accusation presented, we see the absence of proof. It’s always interesting, I think, in all the trials so far that we’ve seen of Paul, that nobody ever had any evidence; they were all trumped-up, false charges.
The end of verse 7, all these grievous complaints against Paul were laid, “which they could not prove.” They couldn’t prove any of them. No witnesses, no support, no evidence, no case. Now, you say, “Well, maybe they hadn’t really worked on it.” Don’t you believe that. You know, in chapter 23, they tried to get a case against Paul, and there weren’t any witnesses there. They tried again in chapter 24, and there weren’t any witnesses.

Now, I think one of the notes - this is just a little thought I have; it may be true, may not be - but I think the possibility of verse 6 saying that “he had tarried in Jerusalem for eight or ten days” – some of your Bibles only say ten days, the original manuscripts say eight or ten days. That the reason the Holy Spirit puts that there is because that gives the Jews plenty of time to get their case together.

And you better believe that, since they had been shot out of the saddle twice already because of a lack of evidence, and a lack of witnesses, that they used those eight or ten days, at least a good portion of them, to scurry around and try to find some witnesses, or bribe some witnesses, and God never let it happen. There were no witnesses. Paul had done nothing. There was nobody who witnessed what he did, because he didn’t do anything. And apparently, God didn’t even allow them to bribe some witnesses.

And so, they show up without any witnesses. And again, when the thing starts, and Paul gives his testimony, the thing that knocks you over is his absolute innocence. And that brings us to principle number five, which follows just the one I gave you: the innocence and blamelessness of Paul, and the effect of that innocence. I’m telling you, the effect of an innocent, blameless life on the world is powerful; it’s powerful. Let me show you a passage here – 1 Peter chapter 3 – and a passage that you’re familiar with.

I’m going to look at it for you with a different kind of slant. First Peter 3:14: “But if you suffer for righteousness’ sake, happy” – happy – “are you: and don’t be afraid of their terror, don’t be troubled.” You know, if you start suffering for righteousness’ sake. Now, if you suffer for sin, that’s a different story; if you’ve fouled up your life so much that you’re getting abuse because you’ve sinned, that’s another thing. But if you’re suffering for righteousness’ sake, if you’re living a godly life and, all of a sudden, you’re really getting it, happy are you.

And don’t be afraid of their terror, don’t be troubled, but do three things. Take care of what you are, what you say, and make sure what you think. That’s the next verses, watch. “Sanctify the Lord Christ in your heart.” “Sanctify the Lord Christ in your heart.” What does that mean? That means set apart Christ in your heart. That really simply is a statement saying, “Be holy. Be holy.” Watch the second thing? “And then be ready to give an answer to every man that asks you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear.”

Number one: check what you are, and make sure you are holy. Number two: check what you say, and make sure you speak the truth of God. Number three, check what you think – verse 16 - have a good conscience. He says, “Now, you’re going to get persecuted for righteousness’ sake; stand on what you are, a holy life. Stand on what you say, the truth. And make sure that, when all is done, your conscience is clear, your thoughts are clear, you know you’ve not violated God.” And you know what will happen?
“They’ll speak evil of you as evildoers” – verse 16 – “but that they may be ashamed because they falsely accuse your good manner of life in Christ.” You know how to rebuke people who accuse you? Just give them nothing to accuse you of, and then their accusations, they’ll have to face the fact that their accusations are unfounded. And they’ll have to face the fact that the real issue is their hatred of Christianity, and they’ll be forced to face that.

By Paul’s innocent life, he made those people, over and over again, face the fact that what was really wrong was their hearts were not right. They hated Jesus Christ; they resented God’s Messiah. He forced them to feel that way, to recognize that, because there was really nothing for which they could blame Him. Take stock of what you are, set Christ apart in what you say, and what you think. And then be bold, and stand up, confronting the world with an innocent life. The power and impact of that kind of life can make the world ashamed.

And shame may be a cause of conviction that can bring somebody to Christ. A step further here in our principles; let me give you principle number six. Another principle we see in this particular situation, as Paul is brought before this governor, but there’s no evidence, is the exoneration of Christianity of any crimes. You know, it was a very popular thing for the Jews to try to get rid of Christianity by accusing the Christians of being criminals against the Roman government.

They had tried throughout all the book of Acts - the early history of the church as it grew from Jerusalem to Rome – they had tried over and over and over again – the Jews had - to make the Romans believe that Christianity was revolutionary; that Christianity was sedition, that it was insurrection. That if the Romans tolerated the Christians, they’d overthrow the government. And of course, the hypocrisy of it was enough to make you sick, because the Jews were busy trying to do the same thing.

They had a group called the Zealots, and the Zealots were going around starting riots, starting insurrections, secretly assassinating people that they wanted to get rid of. In fact, they used to kill the Jewish Uncle Toms. Any Jew – in the vernacular of today, of course, they didn’t call them that then. But in the vernacular of today, a Jewish Uncle Tom would be some Jew who paid tribute to Rome. The Zealots would kill them as soon as they’d kill a Roman. So, there was tremendous insurrection coming out of Judaism.

And there, they’re trying to accuse the Christians of doing that, and of course, they never did. And all through the book of Acts, you have repeatedly all those different trials of the Christians, and every time, the Roman government said they were innocent. And the testimony is written down for all time, for all men to know. Christianity is not a revolution. Christianity is not a political threat. Christianity is a personal relationship to a living God, and the world doesn’t need to fear Christianity.

And God’s established that in the printed page of the Word of God. So, every time there is a trial of Christians in the book of Acts, Christians get exonerated. You say, “Well then, why did the Romans start persecuting them?” Well, that happened because there was a change in things. Let me tell you what happened. The Roman Empire was vast, from the Euphrates on the east, to Britain on the west. From the top of Europe and the top of Germany, to north Africa, that entire, huge area was the Roman Empire.

And the Romans were practically scared to death about the possibility of fragmenting that empire, and they worked long and hard to try and come up with a unifying factor that could kind of tie a thread across the whole situation, pull it together. And what they came up with was Caesar worship. If they could get everybody to worship Caesar, that might be the thing they needed to hang it all together. And so, they established Caesar as a god, and demanded out of everybody emperor worship.

Once a year, every inhabitant of the Roman Empire had to take a pinch of incense, burn it to Caesar, and then publicly declare, “Caesar is lord.” After he did that, he could go out and worship any god he wanted to, but he had to believe in the god Caesar, and establish that verbally. Now, you know something as much as I do, that no Christian would do that, don’t you? Salvation is confessing Jesus as Lord. We sang it when we came in here. “He is Lord / He is Lord / He has risen from the dead / And He is Lord.”

That’s the testimony of a believer, and no believer is going to stand up and say, “Caesar is lord.” Well, the Christians wouldn’t do it. That’s when the persecution began. Now, notice what I said earlier, the persecution, then, is not political, it’s what? Religious again. They then persecuted the Christians for religious disloyalty. And as I say, it’s always false religions that lead persecution against the truth, and it was then that martyrdom began. Incidentally, the first guy to really get it off the ground was a man named Nero.

And you’ll be interested to note, Nero was the Caesar at this very time that Paul is in Caesarea. And you’ll find out in just a minute, if you didn’t know it already, that Nero was a complete maniac. He began to murder Christians, and the succeeding Caesars after him continued it, and they murdered them because they were supposedly religiously disloyal. Then they dreamed up all kinds of other accusations. But this perverted character Nero began it. It's funny, because the first five years of his rule weren’t anything.

He just was a sort of an ordinary character - as ordinary as a pervert could be, I suppose - ordinary historically, nothing really happened. But all of a sudden, after his fifth year, bang, everything just broke loose. And it was due to the fact that they established emperor worship, and that really keyed persecution, as I said, because it comes from religious antagonism. But the record stands, beloved; it stands in the Word of God. No accusation, no accusation, no accusation, ever, ever, ever rendered a guilty verdict against the believers; they were never accused of insurrection successfully.

In Acts 16, they took Paul, remember, and Silas, and threw them in jail – the Romans did? Well, you know what happened. God just had a localized earthquake, and just opened every door in the place. And of course, everybody was kind of scared about that, and it says in verse 35, “The sergeants and magistrates got together and said, ‘Let those guys out. Get them out of there.’ And the keeper of the prison told the same to Paul. ‘The magistrates have sent to let you go. Now, therefore, depart and go in peace.’”

You know, they knew that they put them in there without any reason; they were in there as prisoners in the stocks, and they hadn't done one thing. The Romans simply stuck them in there at the whim of some of these Jewish people, and they were upset, Paul and Silas were, about being put in there, in one sense, and yet they accepted it as the will of God. But now the Romans were scared, because they knew they had done this against Roman law, and without any real verdict. And so, they said, “Go tell them to go, quick, get them out, so nobody knows we did this.”
Watch Paul’s reaction. “Paul said to them, ‘They have chosen to beat us openly, uncondemned, being Romans’” – “we’re Romans; they beat us openly, uncondemned” – “and they threw us into prison; now do they think they’re going to put us out privately?” Paul says, “You think they beat us up publicly, they’re going to sneak us out privately?” And the sergeants said this to the magistrates, and the magistrates panicked. “And they heard that they were Romans. They came and besought them” – “Please leave. Please leave.”

You see what the importance of this passage is? The Romans knew they hadn’t done anything, and they just wanted to get their own injustice off their back. Later on, chapter 18, Gallio - the Jews bring Paul to Gallio. Gallio says, “Look, this guy hasn’t done one single thing. Get him out of here,” and he threw the whole case out of court. And that’s how it goes through the whole book of Acts; never were Christians convicted by the Roman government of insurrection. Listen, a Christian is somebody who is a model citizen.

A Christian is somebody who conforms himself to the government for his own conscience’s sake, as well as for the sake of what God would do to him if he didn’t, and I’ll talk about that in a minute. But 1 Peter 2 says in verse 12: “Have your behavior honest among the heathen: that, whereas they may speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.” Here is a Christian’s behavior: “Submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord’s sake: whether it’s the king, as supreme; or the governor” - or the police, anyone.

“Honor the king,” he says. This is part of it as a Christian, because it’s meaningful in giving a testimony. When you do this, you, with your good deeds, will silence the ignorance of those who would persecute you. So, the Christian is to be the example. Now, listen to Paul’s denial – back to Acts 25:8. So, they have no proof, so Paul answers, and he says, “Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple” - the law of the Jews was the accusation of sectarianism, the temple, the accusation of sacrilege, and - “nor yet against Caesar” - the accusation of sedition.

He hadn’t done any of these things. “I have not offended in anything at all.” That’s the end of the case, folks. You don’t bring a case into court and say, “He did this, he did this, he did this,” and the guy says, “Where’s the evidence?”“Well, there is no evidence. I’m just saying he did it.” That’s no case. There’s no case. What should Festus have done? Thrown it out; should’ve dismissed the thing right on the spot. But you know what? If Felix was the procrastinator, Festus was the guy who did what was expedient, and maybe that’s even worse.

Whatever benefitted him. Now, he knew that if he just dumped Paul, he’d really be in bad, bad trouble, because the Jews from the very beginning would be against him, because they wanted this man dead. And he was scared to release Paul, though he knew he was innocent. He wanted to be in with the Jews, he wanted to do what was expedient, so he comes up with a compromise. Verse 9: “But Festus, willing to do the Jews a favor” – now, where is justice, friends? What is this favor routine? – “answers Paul, and said, ‘Will you go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?’”

“I’ve got an idea, Paul. We’ll compromise. You will go to Jerusalem, but I’ll be the judge.” That sounds like a compromise. They wanted to have Paul go to Jerusalem, and they, as the Sanhedrin, would judge him. “No, we’ll go to Jerusalem because they want that, but I’ll compromise; I’ll be the judge.” Well, the issue was not even an issue; there was no trial because there was no case, and they had just proven that again, for about the fourth time.

And by this time, Paul is a little bit upset, and he shows it in verse 10, in a very potent response. “Then said Paul, ‘I stand at Caesar’s judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as you very well know.’” Well, that’s pretty strong language, talking to a big wheel like that, talking to the judge. Notice what he says: “I stand at Caesar’s judgment seat.” Any province with a governor who sat on the seat of judgment was Caesar’s representative, and here he was standing before the representative of Caesar.

So, he says, “Look, I’m standing right here before Caesar’s judgment seat. If you’ve got a crime to deal with, deal with it. I’ve never done anything wrong to the Jews, and you know I haven’t.” Now, Festus did know he hadn’t. Yes, he did. Down in verse 18, when Festus later on talked to Agrippa, he said to Agrippa, verse 18: “Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought no accusation of such things as I supposed.” “I thought they really had a case; they never had any case.” Well then, why didn’t you let him go? “Well, it’s a political thing.”

So, here Paul is a ping pong ball between the Roman governor and the Jewish leaders. They’re playing this little game of how to get along, and he is the victim, getting batted around, and he’s getting tired of this. He’s a little bit upset at seeing the absolute naïvety of Festus, who would believe that they were just going to deal so nicely with him in Jerusalem, and he knew in his mind they probably had a plot to kill him. He is a little bit tight because Felix was a procrastinator and a materialist, and now, to add to that, here is the expediency of Festus doing what’s going to benefit him.

And he stands there, trapped in a snake pit of intrigue; he’s victimized by these two groups with their little interplay. So, he stands up for his rights as a Roman citizen. He says, “I am a Roman citizen. I stand before Caesar’s judgment seat; if you’ve got a case, prosecute the case. If you don’t have a case, forget it. I’ve done nothing against the Jews.” And he says, “You know it, Festus.” Well, man, stick your finger in the nose of a governor like that and say that, you could be in hot water. But I like his courage, don’t you?

I mean, when the man believed in a principle, he stood up for his principles. He was no compromiser. It’s amazing when you see how a man stands for absolutes, and you compare him to compromisers. What a difference. Verse 11: “For if I am an offender” - that is, if I have committed a crime - “and have committed anything worthy of death: I refuse not to die.” “I’m not trying to escape death,” he says. “That is not the issue.” And you can believe it’s true, can’t you? Paul didn’t care about dying one bit; dying was just promotion for him.

For him, to die was gain. He says, “It isn’t death that I’m avoiding; it’s justice that I’m after.” “If I’m an offender, have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things of which these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them.” “I know Roman law, and if I haven’t done anything, there is no reason to deliver me to them.” Now, that’s strong stuff, Paul. Well, you know, it was - courageous. And if you think that’s courageous, look what he does now; the end of verse 11: “I appeal unto Caesar.”

Now, when he said that, that was not just an offhand comment; that was an official appeal. And that brings us to our fourth point, the appeal proposed. A lower court judgment could be appealed to Caesar. In fact, the appeal could be given before or after the verdict of the lower court. All the apostle Paul had to do, if he was Latin, was say, “Ad Caesarem provoco,” or “Caesarem appello,” and that amounted to “I appeal to Caesar,” and the case ended on the spot and was transferred to Rome. This was one of the rights of a Roman citizen, and that’s what Paul does.

He says, “I’m taking this thing to Rome.” Now, he knew he was getting nowhere in Caesarea. He was mired down in the stupidity of this little political battle that was going on, and he was the victim of the whole thing. He says, “I appeal to Rome,” and the very moment that he said that, the thing shifted out of the hands of Festus, into the hands of Caesar in Rome. Now, I can imagine that, in a sense, that Paul got kind of excited on the inside when he said that, ‘cause he knew that, back in 23:11, when he was sleeping that night in the cell, the Lord came to him and said, “Hey, don’t be too discouraged.

“You’ve been faithful preaching the Word here. The next stop is Rome.” So, he knew God was getting him there, and when he was able to say, “I appeal to Caesar,” he must have been somewhat exhilarated, realizing that was the ticket to Rome. Well, you know what, there’s another thought here that I had, and that is that appealing to Caesar wasn’t just really that great, when you consider who Caesar was. You know, if he probably would have, in a sense, thought about it long enough, he would’ve said, "I’m probably better off with an expedient character like Festus, than I am with a complete maniac like Nero."

I mean, you know, going to be judged by Nero wasn’t exactly the epitome of the anticipation of absolute justice. Just to give you a little insight into him - and I can’t even go into all the things he did. He was the most immoral man that a man could ever be; absolutely inconceivable, just beyond belief. But just to give you a little idea of the things that he did in terms of murder, he killed Britannicus - who did not write an encyclopedia, incidentally - he killed Brittanicus, the son and heir of the emperor Claudius, and, of course, moved in on his territory.

He killed his mother, Agrippina, to please his lover, Poppaea, who was the wife of somebody else. Then he burned Rome, and got mad at Poppaea, and killed her by kicking her in the stomach when she was pregnant. He wanted to marry his adopted sister, Antonius. She wasn’t real excited about the deal, so he killed her. He married Messalina, after he assassinated her husband, and he spent his career busily assassinating all the best citizens of Rome, because he couldn’t stand good people.

Finally, he did the smartest thing, killed himself, which delivered everybody. And you know what I see in this? Another principle, principle number seven: I see the courage of a committed Christian. The apostle Paul stands up and does two things that I would say are courageous: number one, he rebukes, face to face, the governor of Judea, Festus; number two, he puts himself in the hands of a maniac. Took courage. Courage is born of confidence in God, isn’t it? I know that he realized that God could overrule Festus, and God could overrule Nero, and on that basis, he was courageous.

Courage is not an intangible; courage is born of faith. Courage is an absolute that is born out of confidence in God, and he believed that God was running his life, and nothing bothered him. He was like Joshua and Caleb; 12 spies went into the land, 10 came back with a grasshopper complex, remember? “Oh, they’re giants, and we’re like grasshoppers!” Two came back and said, “Let’s go and take it.” Courage. Over all the hassling going on about whether, “How are we going to defeat Sisera’s army?” in Judges 4.
“How are we going to defeat Sisera’s army?” And a lady walks up named Deborah, and says, “Come on, I’ll lead you to victory.” All the men blink and follow. Or maybe in 1 Samuel, you read about David, the tremendous courage of David. David walks out with a handful of rocks to fight a giant. It wasn’t just that he believed he was a good shot, it was that he believed that God would deliver him. Courage is born of confidence. Confidence is born of faith in God, and Paul had that faith.

All the way to Jerusalem, they kept saying, “The Holy Spirit witnesses in every city that bonds and afflictions await you.” He says, “None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, that I might finish the ministry the Lord has given to me with joy.” Courage. There’s something about courage that is just irreplaceable. There’s something about the Christian who is willing to stand up and say what’s true. I shared this in the early hour. We were talking about this, and a guy came to me afterwards and said he had to give a speech, and he had to give a speech to a group of people.

It was a secular group of people, he was giving a supposedly secular speech, and he decided, since there were a third of them were Jewish, that he’d give a talk on the proof that Jesus was the Messiah. And it was a speech to be critiqued by a group of people, and he got up and gave it, and he said, “You know, your sermon this morning? Absolutely, this is what happened to me this week.” And he said, “I never understood what God was doing. Once I got into the thing, I was afraid. I gave the thing.

“After it was over, I got blasted, and bombarded, and criticized.” And he said, “When I saw what I saw in the Word of God this morning, I want you to know how my heart’s rejoicing.” He was willing to do that; he had courage to do it, and believe me, folks, God’ll honor that. That’s the courage to stand and say what needs to be said, wherever you need to say it, and know that God is going to take care of what happens. Courage is a virtue that belongs to a committed Christian. Well, look at verse 12: “Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, ‘Have you appealed to Caesar? unto Caesar shall you go.’”

He had to check with his Roman council to find out if Paul had Roman citizenship, and it was legitimate to make the appeal, so he says, “You’re going to Caesar.” And you can just imagine heart’s, Paul’s heart going thump, thump, thump - Rome, at last. And he’d written the book of Romans and said, “I want to come. I want to come, and I want to minister to you, and I want to impart some spiritual gift to you, and I want to establish a base to go from you to Spain,” and boy, he had Rome on his mind, didn’t he?

And now, all of a sudden his heart must have been thumping, “I’m going to Rome. I’m going to Rome.” You say, “Well, he could have done this a lot earlier; two years earlier, he could have appealed.” Ah, you’re right. And I’ll show you in a minute why he didn’t. Let me give you the eighth principle that I see here, and that is the believer’s behavior before government. It’s interesting, I think, that Paul says, “I appeal to Caesar.” He had put himself in the hands of the government, and quite a government, right?

Paul has laid out for us here a pattern, or an example, that believers should follow. We are really to put ourselves in the hands of government. You say, “Well, how can we do that?” Because government is an institution of God. For just a moment, I want to call your attention to Romans 13, and mention a couple of thoughts that I think are very important that help us get a perspective on the believer’s attitude toward government. Romans 13, verses 1 through 6 or so, really does give us a pattern.

Verse 1 says, Romans 13: “Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God.” Doesn’t mean that every elected official and every ruler in the world is God’s man; it just means that government, as such, is of God. The institution is of God; the format is of God. Now, notice verse 2: “Whosoever therefore resists the power, resists the ordinance of” – whom? Of – “God.”

If you fight against the government, you are resisting God. “And they that resist shall receive to themselves judgment.” You ought to be a model citizen, not only for the sake of your testimony, but for the sake of the judgment that comes from God in chastisement if you don’t. Listen, Christians are not to be revolutionaries; they are not to rebel. Now, there are times when, if in a society, a government forbids you to love the Lord Jesus Christ, or to worship Him, that’s a different thing.

But within the framework of those laws which exist in a government, we are to be submissive and obedient. “For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to evil.” I don’t care if you’re talking about China, or Russia, or the worst of those countries that we could bring up, those countries still protect people who do good deeds, and still punish criminals. We may not agree with the philosophy, and the religious persecution is another factor, but basically, they protect good deeds.

Not necessarily good people, ‘cause evil people can do good deeds in confirmation to a government. But as long as we obey the government, the government is there to take care of us. Now, of course, for the sake of persecution religiously, there may be a variable there, but generally speaking. “Do that which is good, and you will have the praise of the same.” If you’ll behave yourself, don’t break the law, you’ll get along fine. If you’re going to drive 120 in a 40-mile zone, don’t feel you’re being persecuted for righteousness’ sake.

“For he is the minister of God to thee for good.” It’s amazing to realize that these people who are over us in government are ministers of God; not that they know it, but just that God uses them to effect His will. If you do that which is evil, you’d better be afraid. If you violate the government, if you disobey the government, you have a good right to be afraid, for they are not bearing the sword in vain. God gave them that sword, and God gave them the prerogative to do with that sword as justice demands.

So, “you must needs be subject, not just for wrath” - that is, not only because you might get punished – “but for conscience” - so you’ll have a clear conscience. “So pay your taxes,” verse 6 says, “because the people collecting it are God’s ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honor to whom honor.” Now, the Christian, then, is to subject himself to his government. It’s important for us.

We’re not to be like the Zealots, who used violence, who plundered, who murdered, who killed even the Jews who were obeying the Romans. Paul here – watch this – Paul really, by his attitude, disconnects Christianity from Judaism in another way. The Jews had fanatically been anti-Roman; he makes it clear that Christianity and a condescension to government and authority go together. Civil government, in whosoever’s hands it may be, is no less a divine institution, and is to be obeyed.
Even if Nero is on the throne - and that’s who was on the throne when Paul said this. You say, “Well, it certainly it doesn’t apply if you got a crummy ruler.” Oh yes, it does. His letter, in fact, was written to the Romans - here it is - and the Roman government was ordained of God - that’s what he said. So he appeals to a divine institution. You say, “But what if the divine institution doesn’t do what it ought to do?” Well, that’s for God to decide. The standard is still there.

One other principle, along this line: I think this passage also teaches us the believer’s attitude toward martyrdom. In the early church, there were people with a martyr complex. They tried hard to die as martyrs, because they believed there were two levels of future life: one for the normal people, and one for the martyrs - that isn’t taught in the Scriptures - and so everybody wanted to be a martyr. There’s something interesting, just to remind you of: the man who seeks martyrdom isn’t the martyr.

The only person who is a martyr is the one who has fought for every possible escape, and found no way out. Did you notice something interesting about Paul; he used every single resource to avoid death? He never even appealed to Caesar, because he knew what that might involve, until the last possible hope was gone of any other solution. Paul was not some kind of a spiritual masochist. You know, there are even Christians like that, who think that the only time they’re godly is when they’re in pain; the sicker they are, the more holy.

Not so. If God brings you joy, if God brings you marvelous health, if God brings you peace and safety, just thank Him and praise Him. If He brings you pain, as there is no other alternative, thank Him for that as well. Well, you see some great principles here, don’t you? Just kind of a review this morning. Let me close with one thought. The thing I think that overrides everything else, and the one dramatic principle that sticks in my mind, and just dominates my thoughts is this: the impact of one totally dedicated life.

Only eternity will be able to measure the impact of that one man – one man - Paul. Staggering impact on his entire world. And I thought to myself, even as I was thinking about that, that I would pray to God - I know I could never have the impact that he had - but I would pray to God that I would maximize whatever impact I could have on this world. That I would order my priorities, that I would maximize my time - and that doesn’t mean that I run around like a chicken with my head cut off; it means I find out the priorities, and I function within them.

Maybe the best way for you to maximize your one life is to pour it into three other people, who will be able to multiply it. I don’t know. But all I know is as Christians, we ought to realize that one man can affect a whole world, if that man is right before God, and that ought to be a challenge to every one of us. Let’s pray. Father, we’re thankful this morning for the joy that’s been ours in just seeing again the pages of the Word of God, and having revealed to us the truth of God. Thank You for the principles we’ve seen and learned this morning hour.

We realize, Father, that it is the one totally dedicated life that You multiply, and that You use to Your glory, and we would, Father, desire above all, that we, through the power of the Holy Spirit, might be that kind of life. That we might touch other lives, and we might affect our world; we might influence it toward Jesus Christ, whatever the price that we must pay, and we thank You for that privilege. We await the day when we shall be with Thee, and hear, “Well done, good faithful servant.” We pray in Christ’s name. Amen.
